Content	In Vienna, building greenery is still in the early stages of development. Our renovations of late 19th century houses with comprehensive greenery of roofs, buildings and courtyards are a delicate plant compared to the concrete jungle backyards. Courtyards are still getting paved and facade greenery is removed in order to save the owners from alledged damage and maintenance cost. The consequences are sad, dark yards without nature that attract vandalism, while owners are faced with increased cleaning costs. The benefits of a microclimate in and around the house, positive influence on man, nature and the environment as well as the unrivaled living experience must be thoroughly explained first in order to convince skeptics that a green oasis rather than a concrete yard is the best option. From many years of experience, Hans Jörg Ulreich knows what can be done. Plants grown exclusively in Austrian tree nurseries are planted in accordance with a permaculture expert. Greenery is taking its time in Vienna.
